

December 15, 2012

Dear Friends –

We sit in stunned silence as we hear the reports coming from Newtown, CT: A gunman opens fire at Sandy Hook Elementary School, killing children and adults. Our world spins upside down. We are reminded of other tragedies we have witnessed and we again encounter our feelings of pain and brokenness. Violence is never easy to deal with or talk about, but when the victims are so young, it leaves us feeling especially shaken and vulnerable.

As we continue to mourn this terrible loss, we hold close in prayer all those in that community as well as all those who are tied to that community through family and friends. Please take time to remember all the students, teachers, parents, families, employees, neighbors and citizens who are grieving.

Because we know it is easy to feel helpless or unsure of what to say, we compiled this collection of suggestions and resources that we hope will help. We encourage you to distribute this resource to all parents, youth leaders, Sunday School teachers or anyone else that may benefit from it. You also have permission to post a link to this document on any church-related website and you can use this address:

http://www.leaderresources.org/sites/default/files/TALKING_WITH_CHILDREN_ABOUT TRAGEDY.pdf

As we walk through these difficult days, may we find glimpses of the coming Christmas season when we are reminded once again of Emmanuel, God with us.

God's peace to us all,

Tracey E. Herzer
Executive Director & Publisher

God our Father, you see your children growing up in an unsteady and confusing world: Show them that your ways give more life than the ways of the world, and that following you is better than chasing after selfish goals. Help them to take failure, not as a measure of their worth, but as a chance for a new start. Give them strength to hold their faith in you, and to keep alive their joy in your creation; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Prayer for Young Persons, BCP p. 829

TALKING WITH CHILDREN ABOUT TRAGEDY

Images from school shootings saturate our televisions, radios and conversations, calling to mind other dark days. When this kind of violence happens, it is important to talk with our children, but it is often difficult to know what to say. Here are some suggestions that may help...

- ✘ First and foremost, children need to be reassured that they are safe. Children often experience anxiety, fear and a personal sense of risk. Limit television viewing for younger children, especially those of preschool age. It is very difficult for young children to process images and messages in news reports. Let children know that tragic events are not our everyday experience and that the adults who love them will always try to take care of them. (ie – “I know you are scared. I am too. It’s a scary thing that happened, but I love you and I will always do my very best to make sure that you are safe.”)
- ✘ Just like adults, children will have varied reactions. They may ask lots of questions, cling to parents or exhibit behavior of younger children, have stomachaches or headaches, or may have difficulty sleeping or have nightmares. Older children and adolescents may make inappropriate jokes or glib comments or direct their anger and frustration at other seemingly unconnected situations. All of these are various ways of dealing with tragedy. Expect and give permission for a wide range of reactions. It is important to validate your child’s feelings and not try to explain to them why they should feel another way. Many children will need more physical affection and one-on-one time with parents.
- ✘ The best plan for discussion is to talk honestly, but without a lot of graphic detail. Be gently concrete and truthful when answering questions. Be careful of using euphemisms for death such as the people “passed” or “went to sleep” or “went away”. These may send scary messages to younger children who wonder if they might go to sleep and not wake up or if their parents will go away forever.
- ✘ Be aware of where your child is developmentally. Preschool children may see death as reversible, temporary or impersonal. Children between ages 5-9 are beginning to realize that death is permanent but may still think they could escape through their own ingenuity or efforts. From age 9 or 10 through adolescence, children begin comprehending fully that death is irreversible, that all living things die, and that they too will die someday.
- ✘ Reinforce your family’s values. This is a good time to talk about your family beliefs regarding the sanctity of life or helping others. Reiterate your position as a person of faith and don’t be afraid to say, “I don’t know why this happened” or “I just don’t know how to answer that.” Also be aware that some religious explanations that may comfort adults may unsettle a child. For example, saying “It must have been God’s will” or “Those people are with God now” might be frightening to a child who may worry that God could decide to come get them. Assure them that God loves us and is present as we struggle to understand.
- ✘ If they don’t want to talk, give them other options. If your child doesn’t want to talk much about the incidents and you suspect they may be worrying about things they can’t articulate, you might ask them to draw pictures or talk about what feelings they think other people might be having. This gives the child an opportunity to gain some distance to what they themselves are feeling. If your child doesn't want to talk about the events at all, they may not need to talk and you might just take a walk with them or read them a book or give them a hug to let them know you care about them and how they are feeling.

- ✘ Remind children of safety procedures. Talk about measures that are already in place, such as police, fireman, authorities and policies at school for dealing with danger, etc. Talk with them about safety plans that might make them feel more comfortable. Keep talking with them even after the media coverage subsides.
- ✘ Keep your schedule normal. In as much as it is possible, try to continue with family routines such as dinnertime or bedtime rituals. Children (and adults) can often find some comfort by connecting with some sense of normalcy, even in the midst of chaos and fear.
- ✘ Find a way to participate in rebuilding or reconciliation. Times of tragedy bring out both the worst in people and the best in people. Help your children by making a conscious choice to take part in caring for others and helping where you can. Get involved in a neighborhood watch or a community campaign. Doing something concrete helps us feel like we are part of the solution and it a definitive statement of hope and rebirth.

When we respond to tragedy, our feelings may be intense and varied. Give your children and yourself some time to adjust. There are no magic words, no “right answer” – just be with your children and talk with them. Remember there are people available to help you – your school counselors, as well as community agencies and professional counselors who are specially trained to deal with situations like this; and there are many resource people in the church who can be of tremendous help and comfort in a time of tragedy.

ADDITIONAL SUGGESTIONS

- ✘ Consider spending some family time praying for people who have been hurt or have died. Talk to God about not understanding why this happened. Pray for the students, teachers, and employees at the school, as well as the people who live in the area and people everywhere who lost someone they loved and people who are saddened by this event.
- ✘ Read prayers together from the Book of Common Prayer or other books (One suggestion is to look through the services for burial, pages 462-507, or read collects such as For Social Justice on p. 260 or the Prayer attributed to St. Francis on p. 833 or the Prayer for the Human Family or the Prayer for Peace on p. 815 or For Schools and Colleges on p. 824.)
- ✘ Read scripture together (Especially appropriate are Psalm 23, Psalm 34:18, Psalm 46:1, Psalm 121, John 14:27, Romans 8:34-35, 37-39, 2 Timothy 1:7, Revelation 21:2-7)
- ✘ Don't hesitate to contact members of the clergy or educational staff at your church if you want further suggestions or just want to talk.

TALKING WITH TEENS ABOUT TRAGEDY

Much of what has been written about talking with children can pertain to talking with teenagers as well, but some additional suggestions follow:

- ✘ Teen reactions may be intense. Teenagers already live with emotional ups-and-downs and a tragic event may exacerbate the situation. Watch for displaced anger/aggression and be aware that routine disagreements may escalate quickly while teens are processing feelings. Try to be gentle with your teen. Give them space and consider letting some non-essentials slide for a few days. Tell them you love them – even if you aren't sure they want to hear it.
- ✘ Reassure your teens that the world is not total chaos. Many teens will have increased anger and cynicism about people in general, especially when they hear stories of cruelty and brutality. Pointing out ways people have honored or mourned the victims and tried to help victims' families may help balance out some of the anger teens feel about the world.
- ✘ Teens may be fascinated with graphic details. Teens inundated with media images may be mesmerized by gory news reports, etc. This is one way of dealing with their feelings. They may be overly interested in body counts, stories of how and where people died, etc.
- ✘ Teens are in a different developmental stage. Teenagers understand death is inevitable, universal and irreversible, but may still sometimes feel "this could never happen to me". Teens are more likely to ask big questions about how life works or the nature of God's character. They may need adult guidance to process grief or develop appropriate coping skills, but don't be surprised if they first turn to their friends. Teens are often unsure how to handle emotions (publically or privately) and may best process as they talk with friends.
- ✘ Talk about how we treat others. It is important to discuss the complex social forces that can sometimes lead to violence. Talk honestly about social pressures in teens' lives... about what it feels like to be left out or ostracized; about how we deal with alienation and how we manage our anger. While most situations won't lead to this kind of violence, it is important to acknowledge the frustration and pain that people feel when they don't fit in.

ADDITIONAL SUGGESTIONS

- ✘ Brainstorm ways to help. Finding concrete tasks may help your teenager regain their sense of personal power and security. Writing consolation cards, working to make schools and communities safer, advocating for gun control, or just vowing not to contribute to violence in any way – all these may help your teen regain equilibrium. Check out the National Crime Prevention Council for great teen programs: www.ncpc.org/programs/tcc/
- ✘ Besides reading the scriptures or prayers listed above, the Journey to Adulthood (J2A) Curriculum offers a wonderful lesson plan called "What I know, what I don't know, and what I believe." This is a great way to process what has happened, to give voice to all that we don't understand or control and to reaffirm our basic beliefs.
- ✘ Another good option for teens is to read through The Great Litany (p. 148 BCP). Many congregations use this litany in Lent, but the words offer some haunting and comforting words that may help to express some of our feelings about recent events... VERY powerful!

ADDITIONAL RESOURCES AVAILABLE

https://www.ctepiscopal.org/Content/Disaster_Response.asp

Long list of resources, websites and valuable information from The Episcopal Diocese of Connecticut about violence and news headlines.

<http://episcoforma.org/resources-for-dealing-with-tragedy/>

Association of Episcopal educators has put together a list of resource websites and information

<http://newtownbee.com/> or <http://newtown.patch.com/> are both sites local to Newtown, CT and a great source for information and suggestions

<https://newtown.uwwesternct.org/>

Donate to the “Sandy Hook School Support Fund” set up by United Way of Western Connecticut to provide support services to the families and community that has been affected.

http://www.aacap.org/galleries/FactsForFamilies/08_children_and_grief.pdf

American Academy of Child & Adolescent Psychology has this resource from March 2011 on Children & Grief with many practical suggestions. They also offer a current resource here:

<http://www.aacap.org/galleries/default-file/TipsforTalkingtoChildrenabouttheSchoolShooting.pdf>

<http://www.schoolcounselor.org/content.asp?contentid=672>

Resources from American School Counselors Association

An ecumenical website offering several session guidelines and lesson plans for talking about the events of this week, the issues of gun control and where to find God during disastrous events